

The One-Page Year

One page you'll actually look at.

Fill this in once. Put it where you'll see it. Come back to it on the first Sunday of every month.

1 THE SENTENCE

If this year went well, what would be true by the end of it? Write one sentence.

2 THREE GOALS

Three things, not ten. Number them in the order you'd protect them if the year got hard.

1.

2.

3.

3 WHY THESE

For each goal, finish this line: This matters because...

1.

2.

3.

4 THE FIRST STEP

The smallest next step for each goal — something you could do in under an hour.

1.

2.

3.

5 THE FLOOR

One habit you'll keep even on your worst week. Write the smallest version of it that still counts.

A structured self-reflection tool. Not therapy, diagnosis or financial advice.

Five minutes now, five minutes a month

- 1 Print it, or open it in your tablet notes app.
- 2 Answer the five blocks in one sitting. Don't polish — first answers are usually the honest ones.
- 3 Put it somewhere you pass every day.
- 4 On the first Sunday of each month, read it and change anything that's no longer true.
- 5 Cross things out. A plan you've edited is a plan you're using.

IF YOU WANT MORE

This page is the shortest version of a longer method. If it helped, The Compass System takes the same five blocks and adds the part this page can't: how you decide which three goals, and what you do on the weeks it falls apart.

nothingstudio.example/compass-system

This free page is the whole page — there's no locked version of it.